Card from Mrs. Alexander Graham Bell to Dr. Alexander Graham Bell. Panorama Von Rigi-Kulm, May 25, 1901.

We came up to see the sunset and sunrise. Well, we have had most wonderful, almost supernatural effects. Heavy storm clouds to the south through which the white of snow gleamed dimly, to the north and east clear sky and mountains outlined clear. Through the clouds at the east the sun burst most brilliantly, the heavy clouds above became crimson. In front a mist bow gathered and we knew it was raining just there. Also to south of us. Then the bow became suffused with crimson, the sun sank in glory, and the skies were more brilliant than ever, the crimson rain mist came nearer, it was raining hard in the valley, the sunset went calmly on, the rain burst over us, and in a moment the ground was white with hail. Now we are in night, in thunder and lightning, in the midst of a terrible mountain storm, I wish you were here.
